Those among them who have made themselves acquainted with the mystery of the great American game number less than twenty, but the set to which they belong is large and other boys are liable to be drawn in. They have had several quiet games recently. The amounts won and lost have not been large, except in two or three instances, but they were all too large for these boys. Some of the stories told about these games would rival those told of the famous New York Thompson street club; and the mention of that organization recalls the fact that one of the older of these hoye—ambitious to be the leader, has re-

The woodwork under a hearth in a house on South York street, Island, caught fire early yesterday morning, and a still slarm was sent to the Island hose house, but the illames were put out without the aid of the horse. Martin Thornton owns the house. The damage is trifling. The parents of youths inclined to be last, or in any degree open to the temptation of the gaming table, may well ponder the present cituation. Few readers have forgotten the scaudal caused by gaming a few years ago, when Whoeling was shaken up by exposures which brought the blush to many a youthful cheek.
